For Congress.

I hereby announce myself as a candidate for re-election to Congress from the Eighth Congressional District of Mississippi, subject to the action of the Democratic party.

J. W. COLLIER.

WELL REPRESENTED

Yazoo Well Represented at the Farmers' Institute at the A. & M.
College.

Mr. D. A. Swazey and wife, W. T. Clark, Lucius Edwards and Mr. J. J. McGraw, wife and daughter of Deasville took in the institute, and to any these representatives were pleased with what they saw and heard would be putting it mildly. Mr. Swazey pronounced it the greatest disseminator of practical knowledge of agriculture ever instituted. Each day they were given practical talks on different subjects and the talks were demonstrated with the real product, which had been produced by the methods taught. It was the same way with the stock. The man who gave the lectures on this subject had fully tried out the plan and had the stock there to speak for itself, and it spoke in no uncertain terms for all the stock which the college owns is up to the standard in every respect. They have several herds of different breeds of cattle consisting of Ayrshires, Holsteins, Herefords, Durhams and Jerseys.

They are also raising fine horses and mules and have some that would be able to stand the test with any Kentucky or Missouri raised animal. They have also a fine herd of swine, which are of the very best breeds and on this subject gave special instruction on the care of them so that disease could be eliminated. There was also a model dairy with about 80 cows, which was thrown open for inspection in every detail, giving all those who felt any interest in the matter every opportunity to study it carefully. The chickens, which should receive more attention from the farmers, was one of the most interesting features of the institute for with a good flock of hens and two cows no farmer should cry hard times.

The children around Starkville are being trained in agriculture by giving each child a small plot of ground and letting him feel that the responsibility of the development of the product depends entirely on him, and they are instructed by experts as to the best methods of cultivating the soil in order to get the best results.

They have tried to get an artesian well near the college, but so far they have not succeeded and all the water has to be pumped. But with this to contend with the faculty has managed to put in an irrigation system, which has been found to answer the purpose, and consists of over ground sprinkling.

The institute lasted two weeks and every day was filled with good and useful knowledge, which the eight hundred representatives from every section of the State eagerly took in with a view of putting it into practical use in their own section.

There was not a single phase of farm work which did not receive special attention and throughout the whole session of lectures was the idea of diversification of crops. The boll weevil came in for a good share of attention as to the best way to get ahead of his majesty before he gets you.

So well was Mr. Swazey pleased that he is anxious for all who possibly can to attend the institute next year, and as Mr. Swazey is a man who has had a wide experience in agriculture, and being born and reared on a farm, and as he takes great interest in farming and farmers, he will be only too glad to have the farmers get the benefit of the knowledge which he obtained. As there are few men who are so well and favorably known, his word will carry much weight in interesting the farmers in what he saw and heard.

Mr. Swazey says so far as he could learn, President Hightower was giving entire satisfaction, and this school was one of the very best means of bringing Mississippi into her own by educating the youth of the State in every branch of farm work.

STATEWIDE EFFORT TO SAVE THE COTTON CROPFARMERS UNION TO CO-
OPERATE.Ten Cents Minimum Will be Slogan in Mississippi and N. O. Convention.

Chairman Kennington of the cotton holding meeting held in Jackson last Saturday, at which so much enthusiasm was manifested and so much deep interest in the central idea cropped out, has designated a committee to provide for the holding of a State wide convention to be held in Jackson on Tuesday, Sept. 22. This step was provided for by resolution duly adopted, and a committee so selected will undertake to secure statewide interest in the general plan, which is to be one of defense. At the meeting to be held on the 22d steps will be taken to provide for full representation of Mississippi business men and cotton producers at the general Southern States meeting to be held in New Orleans a week later.

Another matter of interest is that the State Farmers Union Convention has been called by the Executive Committee to meet in Jackson next Tuesday, Sept. 15th. It was Gov. Brewer who suggested that if they would learn a few pointers on effective co-operation, in his opinion it would be wise to take a leaf out of the book of experience of the Farmers Union. Co-operation has been the keynote of that organization, and he felt certain that it behooves any gathering or movement contemplating the protection of the cotton producer from five and six cent cotton to try and secure the co-operation of the Union leaders.

Meanwhile Gov. Brower will issue a general call to the people of the State, calling attention to the situation created by the Old World war, and recommending that they get together on common ground, and send their best and most experienced men to the Jackson meeting.

It is the consensus of belief among the men who testified at the meeting last Saturday that affairs may be so shaped that not a bale of cotton need be marketed until the grower is assured of something like a living price, certainly not less than 10 cents a pound for short staple, and a fair proportionate price for the longer staple. With the bankers and merchants standing ready to co-operate and presenting a solid and united front, it is the opinion of these progressive workers that the fight will be easily won.

Eggs Are Now Safe in the Mails.

To test this point the department of agriculture made 466 shipments of eggs in from 1 to 10 dozen lots by parcel post, during five recent months. They were sent from various points under various conditions and at various times. Out of 9131 eggs shipped, 209 were broken, 118 cracked. Ninety-one of the eggs were broken because of the parcels containing them were handled contrary to postal rules, making the loss only 1.3 per cent. The result indicated a better price for the producer and a better article for the consumer. This method of shipment is especially good for the man with a small flock, or far from market. Thin-shelled or long or irregularly shaped eggs should not be sent by mail. The production of the non-fertile eggs will also give better quality and reduce losses. Breakage will be further reduced when postal employees learn how to handle the egg business. Your State experiment station can tell you where to get good containers.

Postponed.

The meeting that was to begin at the Methodist Church next Sunday has been postponed.

CASE OF BETTY ROSS

By JULIA GOUGH.

Young Gilmore tore the program into bits and cast them into the grate.

"Why did you do that?" asked Ruth. "I always keep my programs to remind me of good times."

"I don't require a program to remind me of a good time with you, Ruth," declared young Gilmore, "and I find it wise to destroy all—well, all documents in evidence."

"Why, what do you mean, Billy?" "I mean that there's no use in agitating my sisters any more than is unavoidable. If they should happen to discover an afternoon concert program in my room they would ask at once: 'Who is the girl?' They knew very well that music alone wouldn't call me forth on a Sunday afternoon."

"Nonsense! They know you love music."

"Yes, they do; but they suspect me of loving—well, something else even more."

Ruth made an effort to look supremely bored and succeeded so well that Young Gilmore settled into an almost sullen silence.

"Your sisters take a good deal of interest in you, don't they?" asked Ruth casually after a few minutes.

"Interest! That's putting it mildly. They are fairly ignited with curiosity about my affairs. I never leave the house on an evening but one or both of them ask me where I'm going and whom I'm going with. I sometimes marvel at their persistency in the face of what might be called inglorious defeat, for I never give them the least satisfaction."

"I think that's perfectly horrid of you. I should expect you to tell me something about your affairs if you were my brother."

"I don't aspire to that honor. There is another position that I prefer to—"

"What do you tell your sisters when they ask you whom you've been with?"

"I invariably tell them Betty Ross."

"I should think they'd hate you."

"On the contrary, they appear to like me pretty well. In fact, I modestly believe I'm rather more likable than you seem to think."

"Silly!" "You telephoned my house this morning, didn't you?"

"Yes, I wished to tell you that we ought to start early for the concert. How did you know it was I?"

"My sister Rose and I saw Betty Ross with the sweet voice."

"For me, so, of course, I saw you. Besides, there aren't many girls who have me on their telephone calling list."

"Well," pouted Ruth, "I don't phone you very often—never unless it's something really important."

"I know you don't—hardly once in a blue moon. But, just the same, my sisters have learned your voice. They know your writing, too." Gilmore chuckled. "Grace says it's a good thing I'm an architect or I wouldn't be able to decipher your Gothic hand."

"I don't puzzle you very frequently with specimens of my chirography."

"Not half often enough. I wish you'd try me with a nice little 'Yes.' I venture to say that I could read it without half trying."

"Silly!" "Do you know, I believe you and my sisters would agree perfectly."

"What makes you think so?" "Because, like you, they're always calling me silly."

"Pooh!" "Well, last evening, for instance, when I got home to dinner Rose and Grace asked me in an excited duet, 'Whom were you walking with on Michigan avenue today?' I inquired how they knew I was walking with anybody, and they said that a cousin of ours—who takes a remarkable interest in me, too—had telephoned them that she had seen me walking with a girl at noon. My companion was described to them as wearing a blue silk ratine, whatever that may be, with Bulgarian trimmings. I asked the girls if they were absolutely sure about the Bulgarian trimmings, and when they declared that they were I thought a moment and then said I believed it must have been Betty Ross. They both exclaimed that I was perfectly silly."

"And so you were," agreed Ruth as she gazed at the gay Bulgarian collar and cuffs of the new spring jacket she had thrown off when they came in from the concert. "I don't see, Billy, why you don't tell them the truth."

"If you'd let me know where I stand with Betty Ross, I'd be only too glad to tell them," declared young Gilmore, fervently. "It's up to you."

She Favored the Queen.

Two sisters while visiting Ireland in Victoria's time got into conversation one day with a tenant of their hostess. One of the girls, who was quite stout, asked the old woman if she would have known them for sisters.

"Well," was the answer, "ye look alike, but yer sister's slender, while you, miss—well, you favor the quane."

Explanation.

"Mamma, I know what makes that," said small Sadie, who was watching the lightning flashes during a summer shower.

"What, dear?"

"The angels are scratching matches on the clouds," was the reply.

Miss Frances Blunt Entertains Her
Former Schoolmates at Rook.

Tuesday evening promptly at the appointed hour the guests who were so fortunate as to receive an invitation began to arrive at the hospitable home of Hon. J. T. Blount, where they were most graciously entertained at the interesting game of rook.

On account of Miss Blount having to leave the city on Wednesday, and so many of her former school mates were going to teach here, in the public school this winter and feeling that she would be glad to meet and welcome them to Yazoo she planned this pleasant gathering that they might have a few minutes of pleasure together before the years work began. The home was made bright with beautiful flowers and Miss Frances was assisted in receiving by her two lovely sisters, Misses Katie and Helen, and her cousin, Miss Annie Fletcher Muse.

At the close of the game, which was played with zeal and interest daintily ices and cake was served in a faultless manner.

Mr. James Lear returned last week from Culver, Indiana, where he had been attending the summer school which is conducted each year by the college there, and will leave on the 20th of September, to enter the Seawance, Tenn. military school at that place for the next term.

Mrs. Hannah L. Richardson returned from her summer vacation last Saturday and will again make her home with Mr. and Mrs. R. N. Ingram on Canal street.

Mrs. Edward Crook returned the latter part of last week after a months absence visiting friends in Jackson and New Orleans.

Miss Emily Butt of the Jackson high school faculty, spent the week in the city as the welcome guest of her friends Dr. and Mrs. A. B. Kelly.
